Thomas Glanton, Consultant

Dr. Thomas Glanton understands that in order for learning to take place, schools must have discipline and order. As an experienced principal in an urban district in Atlanta, Georgia, Dr. Glanton has mastered the art of school leadership in operations, instructional leadership, data analysis, and school performance. Through direct experience with Simmons' Comprehensive Discipline Management Program, Dr. Glanton transformed a Title One School and was named the Georgia PTA Principal of the Year. Now, as a consultant and inspirational speaker with Simmons Associates, he concentrates his efforts in tough inner-city schools and has amazing results with all students of all ages.

Dr. Glanton, began his distinguished career as an English Teacher followed with the Student Organizational Advisor, Assistant Principal, Principal and Director of Leadership Development for a large urban school district. He has served in a leadership role and presenter for High Schools That Work and has presented at the Ron Edmonds Institute. He has an extensive background in working with student achievement and discipline — two topics that were a part of his dissertation. In addition to working as a trainer and consultant with Simmons Associates, Thomas has been actively involved with the National Academy Foundation Leadership Conference, the League of Professional Schools Summer Workshop and the Coalition of Essential Schools Leadership Conference.

Dr. Glanton is an outstanding educator that brings as much dedication, skill and enthusiasm to his presentations and workshops for Simmons Associates as he has, throughout the years, to his distinguished career in public education.

“Thomas Glanton is an excellent motivational presenter who held the attention of my staff in the palm of his hands. He not only delivered practical skills with expertise, but was able to read his audience and address their specific needs.”
